We’re Got Rights? An Introduction to Human Rights and Human Rights Defenders
High School – American Government/Civics, U.S. History

Elaborated Lesson Focus

The purpose of this lesson is to introduce students to the concepts of human rights and human rights defenders. Students will draw on their personal knowledge and experience to identify historical and contemporary examples of human rights violations. They will also learn the importance of defenders of human rights, considering Martin Luther King, Jr., as an example.

Georgia Standards of Excellence

SSUSH21 Analyze U.S. international and domestic policies including their influences on technological advancements and social changes during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations

  c. Analyze due process of law as expressed in the 5th and 14th amendments, as understood through the process of incorporation.
  d. Identify how amendments extend the right to vote.

Enduring Understanding / Essential Questions

Human rights are the fundamental freedoms essential to living a full life. Regardless of your sex, race, ethnicity, national origin, economic status or sexual orientation, human rights belong to all people. Throughout history and still today, not everyone enjoys full realization of these rights. Individual defenders of human rights work passionately to uphold the neglected, victimized and ignored.

• What are human rights and how are they codified?
• When have human rights been threatened or violated in history?
• Why are individual defenders of human rights important to building a more equitable and just global society?

Procedure

1. Warm-up Activity: Human Rights Squares
This activity accesses students’ pre-existing knowledge of human rights and issues that interest them. Each student will receive a copy of the “Human Rights Squares” handout and move about the room trying to get an answer and signature from a different classmate for each square. Stop after five minutes.

Students will discuss the following questions:
   a. Which were the easiest squares to find answers for? The most difficult? Why?
   b. Which squares had global answers? U.S. answers? Local or community answers?
   c. How would you define “human rights”? Give examples.
The teacher will write the students’ definition and examples on the board. This will serve as a foundation for continued discussion about human rights. (Assessment – Dialogue and Discussion, Teacher Observation)

2. Making Connections: Universal Declaration of Human Rights

In pairs, students will read and analyze the UDHR. They will identify – by circling – rights that correspond to those listed on the board in the previous exercise. The class will then discuss which rights were not circled. Students will define terms or concepts with which they are unfamiliar. (Assessment – Dialogue and Discussion, Teacher Observation)

3. Identifying Rights Through Images

Students will consider the images presented on the overhead screen and identify which human rights from the UDHR are being depicted or symbolized using the “Human Rights Through Images Worksheet.” For each image, students will describe a historical or contemporary example of when people have not received that basic right. NOTE: Teacher can use transparencies or a PowerPoint to show images. (Assessment – Worksheet Rubric)

4. Synthesis: Human Rights Require Defenders

In light of historical and contemporary instances of human rights violations identified by the students, the class will consider the importance of individuals in defending human rights. Offer Martin Luther King, Jr. as an example by writing his name on the board. Students will list and discuss the basic rights and principles for which he campaigned. They will develop a working definition of ‘human rights defender.’

After discussion, each student will write an essay in which he/she discusses MLK’s role as a human rights defender. Students will explain why MLK is a defender of human rights; give examples of how his leadership contributed to solving injustice; and consider possible consequences if Dr. King had not taken on the role of defender. Students should rely on King’s example to comment more broadly on the importance of human rights defenders today, giving a contemporary example of human rights under threat and how a human rights defender could help the situation. (Assessment – Dialogue and Discussion, Teacher Observation, Essay Rubric)
